

You have to believe it to see it.

It was Christmas Eve in the North Pole and all the elves were busy tidying up the workshop when Santa came in looking very confused.

“Where is Rudolph? I can’t find him anywhere!”

“Maybe he’s in the shed having an afternoon nap?” said an Elf.

“Or in the kitchen looking for food?” said another.

“Maybe he’s getting his nose checked with the vet to make sure its glowing bright for tonight?” said a third.

Just then Mrs Claus came into the workshop looking very worried.

“Santa have you seen your hat? I can’t find it anywhere.”

“It’s in my sleigh Mrs Claus.”

“Well funny you say that... because I checked the shed for your sleigh... and it seems to be missing too.” Said Mrs Claus nervously.

“So, Rudolph is missing?!” cried an Elf.

“And Santa’s hat is missing?!” cried another.

“AND THE SLEIGH?!” cried the third.

“Oh no! Where is everything! Stop what you’re doing Elves and get looking.” Said Santa.

Santa, Mrs Claus and the Elves looked everywhere for Rudolph, Santa’s hat and the sleigh, but they couldn’t find them anywhere. Just then, Mrs Claus went into the living room to continue her search and overheard the news reporters on the TV.

“Breaking News! It has been reported that Christmas Cheer is down by 50% this year compared to last. There have been reports of people foregoing all festive traditions including putting up a Christmas tree and singing Christmas carols.”

Mrs Claus was watching the TV and suddenly looked very white. She ran into the workshop to find Santa and the Elves.

“I have terrible news! Christmas Cheer is down and that’s why everything is missing.” She announced.

“Oh dear, that is terrible news Mrs Claus. You know the sleigh runs on Christmas Cheer. We need to contact the News as soon as possible.”

Santa quickly wrote a letter addressed to the News Reporters and told them of the drastic consequences the lack of Christmas Cheer was having in the North Pole. He put the letter into the fire and everyone in the North Pole waited nervously.

“News just in from the North Pole. Santa has been in touch with us to reveal things have been doing missing in the North Pole due to the lack of Christmas Cheer in the world, including Rudolph and the sleigh. This is extremely serious; we need everyone help. Everyone needs to stop what they’re doing and join in with this Christmas song. After all the best way to spread Christmas cheer is singing loud for all to hear...

Jingle Bells, jingle bells, jingle all the way...”

Suddenly in the North Pole Rudolph appeared in the workshop.

“Santa we better get going.” He said.

“Oh Rudolph you’re back!” exclaimed Santa and he gave Rudolph a big hug.

“Sorry Santa, I must have fallen asleep.”

Santa, Mrs Claus and the Elves all laughed, they were very relieved.

“Oh look Santa your hat!” Said Mrs Claus, finding it hung up on a coat hook. You better get going.”

“Let’s go everyone! It’s time to have a Very Merry Christmas.”

THE END.
